Sizzling summer of teen tech at the library

Free workshops in game design, digital composing, videography, more!

This summer, teens are invited to take a break from the beach and spend some time in the fascinating world of digital creation. Dozens of free classes will be held at all four branches of the Georgetown County Library System.

“Whether you want to design your own game, create apps, compose new music, tell a digital story or make a movie, we’ve got something for you,” promised teen and gaming services librarian Donald Dennis.

For example, on Wednesday mornings at the Waccamaw Library, teens can use computer science to tell fun and interactive stories. On Mondays at the Georgetown Library, kids can create applications as professional as ones making big money on the Internet. Tuesdays at Carvers Bay, teens will explore digital composing and making music videos. Mondays at Andrews, kids 9-14 will build creative games with racing, mazes, falling objects and more.

“And many of these classes are going from library to library, so every area can catch the fun,” Dennis said.

There are so many classes, you’ll want to check the Georgetown County website to choose your favorites: <http://georgetowncountylibrary.sc.org>. You can also call Dennis at the new Waccamaw Library’s Teen Tech Center, (843) 545-3343.
